

A Street Called Cypress

The glowing persimmon sun in Florida in the 50s held secrets. Under ice-gray, angel-wing sunsets of West Virginia the secrets of early childhood physical and sexual abuse continue. Purple and black tears fall down alley walls onto pigeon dung on the streets of New York City in the 60s. The disassociative personality behaviors of a homeless teenager and her secrets went unnoticed in this milieu where some child-teens went missing and were never seen again. Moving back to picture-postcard, scenic New England towns, these things were never discussed. The years, as a young mother, that she lived in those back wards of mental institutions she was merely medicated, sheltered only by the clean sheets on the hospital beds and the metal bars on the windows. Even if taboo subjects had been discussed, she wouldnt have remembered them. This is her story.
