

Hangover Square: A Story of Darkest Earls Court

Hangover Square was written at the peak of Patrick Hamilton's fame - which was by this time considerable. The main protagonist and narrator is George Harvey Bone, a lonely borderline alcoholic who suffers from a split personality, and is obsessed with gaining the affections of Netta, a failed actress. Written under the shadow of the seemingly unstoppable advance of Germany and Nazism, the book really succeeds in its evocation of London as war looms. In common with almost all of Patrick Hamilton's novels, the story is in part inspired by incidents from his own life. Like Bone, Hamilton's life was becoming saturated in alcohol; and like Bone he too was obsessed by an unattainable woman. In Hamilton's case, it was the actress Geraldine Fitzgerald. Fitzgerald is the inspiration for Netta and in a sense could be Hamilton's revenge on her given the unflattering portrait... She was completely, indeed sinisterly devoid of all those qualities which her face and body externally proclaimed her to have - pensiveness, grace, warmth, agility, beauty ... Her thoughts resembled those of a fish...

The novel searches for a human metaphor to express the sickness that Hamilton perceived in this period. As a Marxist he identified the petty bourgeoisie, from which Netta and Peter had sprung, as the enemy. Netta and Peter, along with the stranger who accompanies them to Brighton, are all fascists. A masterpiece.
